- ..Community: Providing opportunities for people to meet, exchange ideas and engage in the life of their community.
- ..Respect: Honoring diversity and individual perspectives.

HISTORY

The Fresno County Public Library was founded in 1910 and housed at that time in the Fresno City Library building, which had been constructed in 1904 with a $30,000 donation from philanthropist Andrew Carnegie. Subsequent gifts provided Carnegie libraries in Selma, Clovis and Sanger between 1906 and 1916. Miss Sarah E. McCardle was the first county librarian, developing the library into the then second largest county library in the state with 54 branches, 152 elementary and high school libraries and a circulation of 748,553 volumes. In 1917, the two organizations merged and the Fresno County Board of Supervisors became the governing body for the County Library system, with 12 communities initially designated to have County branches.

By the late 1950s, the first Carnegie library building had outgrown its original quarters and the time had come to replace it with a new Central Library. The present-day Central Library in downtown Fresno opened on April 13, 1959 and today serves as the Headquarters for the Fresno County Public Library and its branch libraries. The Central Library also serves as the Headquarters Library for the San Joaquin Valley Library System (SJVLS), a consortium of the County libraries of Fresno, Kern, Kings, Madera, Mariposa, Merced and Tulare Counties, as well as the Coalinga-Huron District Library and Porterville and Tulare Public Libraries.
